REPORT OF THE SCHOOL BOARD OF THE TOWN OF DUNBARTON.

The very first thing that our Pilgrim Fathers did after landing upon the rugged shores of New England, and providing a rude shelter for their families, was to found a church. The school house followed next; and from that day to this, these two institutions, side by side, have held the foremost place in the hearts of all her children. Whether they have, by constant toil on the rocky farms which their fathers reclaimed supported their families, and maintained these institutions, or whether on the fertile prairies of the broad West, or while engaged in other pursuits in our large cities, or in foreign lands, the same has ever been true. The result has been this, wherever they have gone, they have always made their mark, and their influence has always been felt and felt for good. Settle where they would, the church and the school house have always usurped the place of the gambling den and grog shop as if by magic.

It has been well said that New England is a good place to be born in; and insignificant as she may appear as, on the map we glance over her few square miles of rocky hills and wooded valleys, nevertheless, in one product—the raising of men—she has always taken the lead. In no other product can she begin to compete with either the South or West; but she may justly place on her roll of honor a large percentage of the noblest, among all the illustrious names, of those whose memory will ever be held dear in the hearts of their countrymen. If they have not come directly from her rocky farms themselves, their fathers did before them. Fifty years ago the fact that a man had been educated in "The East," was a general passport throughout the country, and was held almost as a certificate that he was qualified to fill any position of honor and trust; but more is required of a man to-day, whether his career is to be in business or professional life. And if the sons and daughters of New England are still to hold their places at the front, they must bestir themselves.

In many respects the schools of the West are fully up to our own. Those of the South are rapidly improving; while the other advantages which they can offer are so great that they are constantly drawing from New England the best of her sons, and daughters. Many people, with no children of their own, have the feeling that the taxes they are paying yearly for the support of public schools are money thrown away, while on the contrary it is better invested than if put into government bonds. While the West and South are continually calling away our friends and neighbors from these stony farms, were it not for the churches and school houses, that dot every New England hill-side, these sterile acres could hardly be given away, unless to the poorest class of foreigners. The first question asked by the prospective purchaser, is in respect to these two all important requisites; should the answer to these questions prove satisfactory, he is ready then to look the land over, otherwise he will turn on his heel and walk away, regardless of what the other advantages may be; and in no way can we do more to enhance the value of these farms than by maintaining the enviable reputation of our public schools and doing everything possible to raise their standard higher. We are happy to be able to say, that, as a whole, the schools in our own town have made a better showing during the past year than in many previous ones. In some schools the progress has been particularly flattering; while in a few cases it has fallen below what we had reason to expect. If we can point out some of the causes that have contributed to this success, or caused these failures it ought to help us in the future, otherwise our reports are of little value; no one can be more alive to the fact that your committee are human, and liable to make mistakes, than they are themselves; but in every case, both in the selection of teachers and retaining them, as well as where differences have arisen, they have done what seemed in their finite judgment, for the greatest welfare of the schools and true justice to all concerned, without prejudice or partiality. Our most celebrated training schools have, so far, failed to turn out teachers that have proved omniscient, therefore, we have felt that, when we had secured a really good one it was best to keep her as long as possible, even though some of the more critical have voted her not quite perfect, but in the majority of cases we have found that those who have criticised most had the least opportunity to know the truth respecting that whereof they spoke.

How many of the farmers who turn their young cattle away to pasture fail to visit them once or twice during the season, to see for themselves that the feed is abundant, that the water does not fail or the salt tub get dry? How many of these same men as often find a day to spend in the public school? Possibly the committee and teacher do not look after your children better than the man you employ looks after your cattle, and let us say right here that those schools where you oftenest find the parents present, are the ones that prove the most satisfactory. It is not only unwise, but very unjust, to criticise and censure any teacher without first visiting the school and verifying with your own eyes and ears the statements and criticisms that you make, but in Heaven's name, if these strictures must be made, do not, for the sake of your children, make them in their hearing. The ideal school is where parents, teacher, and pupils are all in harmony, and each one striving to do their very best. Especially is it true in the country, that the teacher needs the active coöperation of the parents, for here more than in larger places, the schools are hampered, if not made comparatively useless, by that greatest of all evils, irregular attendance and tardiness. You might as well expect your cattle to thrive and grow fat, if fed only three or four times a week, and then at irregular hours, as that your children can make progress, by attending school two or three days in a week, and only an uncertain part of those days. While we are constantly seeking for better books, better charts, better teachers, and better methods of instruction, we often lose sight of that most important fact, that self-reliance, self-dependence, persistent individual effort on the part of each pupil, is, after all, the true measure of success. Without this all other aids will but serve to put a little whitewash on the man of putty; but with this fixed, unwavering purpose to excel, even lacking all these outside helps, though the progress may be slower, the good will, in time, be reached none the less surely, as has been proved by thousands of the ablest men our country has produced. No pupil should in any way be led to feel that the teacher or any one but himself, is responsible for his failures, or that his education and his success can, in any way be gained, but by his own carefully continued hard work. Occasionally a stranger, looking about in some of our old pastures, comes across a strange looking tree with which he is not familiar; possibly it is as high as his head. The gnarled, twisted, and crooked trunk, though small, shows all the marks of age, and on every side, from near the ground to its very top, and so thickly interwoven that a bird can hardly fly between, are set the short and scraggy limbs, covered with knots, and spurs, and thorns. It may have a covering of leaves, but never any signs of fruit. The stranger asks, in wonder, what kind of a tree it is, and is informed that it is an apple-tree. "But what makes it grow like that?" he asks, with increased surprise, and the philosophical farmer, who is acting as his guide, replies that when it first came up, a single thrifty, tender shoot, some of the cattle had eaten it off close to the ground; later in the season, two sprouts had started from this little stump only to share the same fate, but the next Spring kind Nature, nothing daunted, sent up a dozen to supply the missing two, but with no better success. And so for twenty years she had kept on, each time sending out more shoots than before, in the vain hope that by chance one, at least, would escape. "But why don't you fence it in, and take care of it now?" "Too late," is the laconic reply. "Stunt 'em when they 're young, and they 'll always be stunted. Dress 'em, and tend 'em as long as you live, you can't make anything but scrubs of them now."

Just as the farmer reaches home, the children come in from school, grumbling about the new teacher. "She'd put them clear back to addition in 'rithmetic, and the sounds of the letters in readin', had them jest read their jogrephy out of the book, did n't do any parsin, either, with them new kind of grammars, and did n't keep no order nohow." Our friend does n't propose that his children shall "waste their time with any such nonsense," so he takes them out of school. The next term they like the teacher first rate, and have just got well started when haying begins; he can't possibly get along without the boy now, and the girl must stay at home to mind the baby. Next term they try again, but "this teacher is awful strict, and just whips them for nothing;" and again, this shrewd, practical man, who really loves his children more than he does his own life, and who is working early and late to save a little money to give them a start in the world, takes them out of school, never dreaming that he is doing for them exactly what his cattle did for that old stunted tree. Though the soil on these hills is none too fertile at the best, and though our country schools are not yet perfect, nevertheless, if we give either the trees or the boys the advantages that naturally come in their reach, we shall find very few scrubs in New England.
